

It took years to build up your reputation as an expert in Implantology.

Yet, it can be destroyed by one negligent choice of an implant.

Ignoring the threats of contaminated implants may cause clinical and legal hazards as well as ethical concerns.

Alarming remnants and contaminants on implant surfaces were found in four consecutive quality assessment studies. Most recently not only very cheap and low quality dental implants have been affected. Almost every second implant sample showed disturbing findings in the SEM/EDS analysis, performed by official accredited testing laboratories. However, even implants with massive contaminants passed national regulations. All samples were in sterile packaging and ready to use for implant surgery – supposed to remain in the patient's bone, at best, for a lifetime.

We will provide you with information you need and your patients deserve.

Our non-for-profit organization is continuously updating the unbiased database of dental implants. We separate implant systems with a high surface quality from those with avoidable impurities. Some companies already follow us, others couldn't care less, discredit our work or even threaten us with legal actions. Thus, we rely on every supporter to sustain and aid our independent work. Your support enables us to carry out more complex research projects and allows us to continue our pursuit.

Being a professional in the field of implantology bears a high responsibility. Avoidable contaminations on dental implants may cause serious problems for every practitioner and patient. Only a strong community of dental professionals will build up the pressure we need to make a change on the current implant market.
